Appeal from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Idaho, Ada County. Deborah A. Bail, District Judge.

Eric D. Frederickson, State Appellant Public Defender, Boise, for appellant.

Lawrence G. Wasden, Idaho Attorney General, Boise, for respondent.

Riley Lodge (Lodge) appeals from the judgments of conviction entered against him for two counts of sexual battery of a minor sixteen or seventeen years of age. After Lodge pleaded guilty to the two counts, the district court entered a no contact order that prohibited him from having contact with the named victims and "[a]ll minor children." On appeal, Lodge contends that the district court abused its discretion by failing to provide an exception for two of his biological children, who were conceived as a result of the sexual batteries. Lodge argues that the district court failed to exercise reason because there was no evidence that he posed a threat to his own children. The State responds that the district court did not abuse its discretion because the district court's decision was supported by the psychosexual evaluator's assessment that Lodge presented a high risk of reoffending.
